Every script starts with the words “The scene starts with/in”

Character: When a character talks, its name is in Italic-Bold and its text is in plain Italics. Also when the words of a character, note, subtitle or message are going on the next line, you skip five spaces. (Just like here.) Every character has its own color.

When an action is explained (Like: Roy is standing in front of The HOLS) it is in plain text and the color is black.

N-Character: When “N-” is in front of a character's name it means this character is talking in a narrator style. It is also underlined.

Subtitle: Subtitles are pieces of text that appear on the bottom of the screen, they are mostly to clarify a situation, to give explanation or to give a small comment on something. The subtitles are in complete Italic-Bold and in a black color.

Note: A note is a small word from the author to explain something. The word “Note” is in Bold while the note itself is in plain text. The note is in a black color.

- Flashback -

Character: cries* When something between asterisks (*) and bolded is in front of a character's words, it gives the condition in which these words are told. In this example the character cries while talking. It could also indicate a single action, like *sigh

Character: *When the condition (cries in this case) is over and the same character is still at word, you still start a new line for this character.*

Character: (When the words are between parentheses like this, then the character is thinking these words instead of saying them out loud.)

- End of Flashback -

Note: When a special condition is applied for a short time (mostly a Flashback) it will be noted like that.

- END - (This is the indicator that the story is over)

- Preview -

Character: This is where the preview for the next episode starts, usually presented by one or more of the characters.
